OUR APPROACH

A clear plan. Practical work. Progress you can track.

1

Find the gaps

Review your profile, website and local competitors.

2

Prioritise the work

Agree on the services, locations and fixes that matter first.

3

Improve and measure

Implement the work and track agreed visibility measures and enquiries where tracking is available.

SAMPLE AUDIT

A useful audit starts with better questions.

Illustrative Australian plumbing audit · Parramatta, NSW. No live business, competitor or ranking data has been used.

Sample work · Not a client result

1. Search context

Example service: plumbing. Example location: Parramatta, NSW, Australia. A real review would record the exact query, date, search location and device. Search results vary; this sample makes no ranking claim.

2. Google Business Profile completeness

Check ownership and eligibility, primary category, offered services, service area, hours, contact details and useful photos. In this sample these are review criteria, not verified findings.

3. Relevant competitor comparison

Comparable service coverage	Check businesses offering the same actual work
Profile information	Compare accuracy and completeness
Website contact path	Compare clarity on mobile

No competitors have been researched or scored here. A real audit names relevant businesses and links dated evidence, with no invented rankings.

4. Website enquiry path

Can a mobile visitor identify the services, confirm suburb coverage and find a working contact option? Submit a test enquiry with permission, check receipt and inspect errors. Check whether hot water systems are actually offered before adding a dedicated page.

5. Three prioritised recommendations

1. First: verify the contact path. If a test form fails, repair it and confirm the request reaches the agreed destination. An open form alone is not evidence of delivery.
2. Next: reconcile essential profile information. If hours, services or contact details are inconsistent, correct them against verified business information.
3. Then: clarify service and coverage content. If the site does not explain the actual plumbing services and suburbs covered, improve the relevant existing pages rather than creating near-duplicate location pages.

These recommendations are conditional examples. A business-specific audit would prioritise observed findings, link evidence and agree measurement access. Enquiries are not the same as booked jobs.

DIFFERENT TRADES. SHARED PRINCIPLES.

The details make the difference.

01 Actual services

Start with the work you offer and the customers you can help.

02 Real coverage

Explain where you work without inventing local offices or near-duplicate location pages.

03 Useful measurement

Agree the available visibility and enquiry measures. Confirmed jobs require client data.

OUR APPROACH

A clear plan. Useful work. Honest reporting.

Understand what is changing, why it matters and what the evidence can tell you.

01

Initial review

Review your profile, website, service areas and relevant local competitors.

02

Access and onboarding

Use role-based access where available. You retain ownership of your accounts; agree a named contact and communication arrangements.

03

Agreed priorities

Set the scope, target services, locations and measures before implementation.

04

Implementation

Make agreed changes with staging, checks and a clear record of the work.

05

Measurement and reporting

Review available visibility data and verified enquiries. A ranking is not an enquiry; an enquiry is not a booked job. Bookings need confirmed client or CRM data.

06

Next-cycle improvements

Use evidence and your operational priorities to choose the next useful work.

ABOUT

Know who’s working on your business.

A working relationship should come with clear responsibilities and understandable decisions.

Clear scope and account ownership

You retain ownership of your accounts. Access, a named contact, communication arrangements and review responsibilities are agreed during onboarding.

Experience should be described accurately

Website project experience is not evidence of local SEO results. Any published case study must explain the actual work, measures and client permissions.

Staging content review
Verified team names, photos, roles, relevant experience, operating location and communication hours are still required before this page is public. No placeholder founder or office details have been added.

AUSTRALIA

Local SEO for Australian tradies and home service businesses.

Help nearby customers understand what you do, which suburbs you cover and how to request a quote.

Service areas that make sense

Communicate the suburbs you actually serve. Use service-area settings accurately and avoid implying a shopfront where none exists.

Language your customers use

For example, an Australian plumbing page might discuss hot water systems if they are actually offered. Service information comes from your business, not a generic trade checklist.

Practical working arrangements

Agree contact, availability and reporting during onboarding. Communication hours and time zones must be confirmed before a schedule is promised.

A concrete Australian example.

Our Parramatta plumbing sample explains the review method. It contains no fabricated business data or client results.

Useful deliverables, with priorities that reflect your business.

01

Local search audit and keyword-to-page mapping

Connect actual services and locations to relevant search intent and existing pages.

02

Service-area content and useful internal links

Explain real coverage, prioritise useful content and help visitors move between related services.

03

Business listing consistency and relevant local authority work

Review important listings for consistency and assess relevant local opportunities without promising links or rankings.

04

Location-specific tracking where agreed

Agree queries, locations, data access and reporting before interpreting changes.

What depends on your scope

The number of services, locations, content pages and tracking integrations is agreed before work starts. Rankings, enquiries and booked jobs are different outcomes; none is guaranteed.

HOW IT WORKS

From first review to the next useful improvement.

01 Map the opportunity

- ✓ Permission before testimonial use

Scope agreed before work begins

ON THIS PAGE

Overview What's included How it works Questions

THE CUSTOMER'S POINT OF VIEW

Build trust through real feedback.

Busy teams can forget to ask for feedback or leave reviews unanswered. A consistent, fair workflow helps customers share their experience.

A CLEAR SCOPE

Know what the work includes.

Useful deliverables, with priorities that reflect your business.

01

Neutral review-request wording and timing

Choose a suitable request moment and neutral wording for all eligible customers.

02

A response and escalation workflow

Define who responds, what needs approval and how concerns are escalated.

03

Review monitoring within agreed channels

Agree the platforms, review frequency and the information that needs attention.

04

Permission-based testimonial use

Request permission and preserve the meaning of customer feedback wherever it is used.

What depends on your scope

Request channels, software costs, monitoring frequency and response approvals depend on your scope.
We do not buy reviews, filter requests to happy customers or promise review removal.

HOW IT WORKS

From first review to the next useful improvement.

01 Agree the process
Review how your team currently collects feedback.

02 Make feedback easier
Set up a neutral request and response workflow.

03 Learn from the responses

THE CUSTOMER'S POINT OF VIEW

Turn visits into clearer next steps.

A customer should quickly understand what you do, where you work and how to contact you. A confusing mobile experience can get in the way.

A CLEAR SCOPE

Know what the work includes.

Useful deliverables, with priorities that reflect your business.

01

Mobile-first design and accessible components

Create clear reading order, keyboard interactions and layouts that work on smaller screens.

02

Clear service pages and service-area information

Help visitors identify the work you offer and confirm whether their property is covered.

03

Quote forms and click-to-call where appropriate

Make quote requests and phone links easy to use, then verify the actual submission destination.

04

THE CUSTOMER'S POINT OF VIEW

Reach searches with clear intent.

Broad targeting and unclear landing pages can use budget without helping the right customer take the next step.

A CLEAR SCOPE

Know what the work includes.

Useful deliverables, with priorities that reflect your business.

01

Search intent and campaign setup

Map campaigns to actual services, relevant searches, locations and the agreed budget.

02

Conversion tracking and landing-page review

Check the connection between the ad, its page and a confirmed conversion before launch.

03

Negative keywords and targeting refinement

Review search terms and exclusions to reduce irrelevant traffic within the agreed strategy.

04

Ongoing optimisation within agreed scope

Use available evidence to adjust the campaign; report ad spend separately from management fees.

What depends on your scope

Advertising spend is separate from management fees. Budget, landing-page work and tracking integrations are agreed in advance. Local Services Ads are considered only after country and trade eligibility are checked.

Overview What's included How it works Questions

THE CUSTOMER'S POINT OF VIEW

Remove friction from your website.

Broken forms, awkward mobile layouts and slow pages can interrupt an otherwise useful website. Start with the problems affecting real tasks.

A CLEAR SCOPE

Know what the work includes.

Useful deliverables, with priorities that reflect your business.

01

Broken-form and navigation diagnosis

Reproduce errors and confirm whether a test request reaches its intended destination.

02

Mobile layouts and redirect review

Inspect navigation, layouts and redirects on representative devices and page types.

03

Image delivery and loading performance

Review unnecessary requests, image sizing and loading behaviour before selecting a fix.

04

A clearly defined technical maintenance scope

Define which platform, plugin and maintenance tasks are included and which need separate work.

What depends on your scope

Third-party hosting, plugins, licences and ongoing maintenance are assessed separately. Lab performance targets guide the work; real visitor performance requires field data.

HOW IT WORKS

From first review to the next useful improvement.

01 Reproduce the problem

Reproduce the issue and identify the cause.

02 Implement a focused fix

Agree a focused fix and test it on staging.

03 Recheck the workflow

LOCAL MARKETING FOR PLUMBERS

Local SEO for plumbers who want more local enquiries.

Connect the customer with a leaking pipe—and the homeowner planning an upgrade—with the right service, in the right area.

Get My Plumbing SEO Audit →

Explore the priorities ↓

THE CUSTOMER JOURNEY

01 Find a relevant local service

02 Understand the work and coverage

03 Make a confident enquiry

01

How customers search

A burst pipe and a planned bathroom upgrade are different searches. Urgent visitors need a clear contact route and accurate availability. Planned work needs enough detail to understand the process and request an estimate.

02

Which services to prioritise

Build priorities around the plumbing work you actually offer: for example, leak repairs, drain cleaning or hot water systems in Australia. US pages may use water heaters. These are examples to verify with your team, not a claim that every plumber offers them.

03

What your website needs to explain

Show service coverage, actual hours and a clear call or quote option. Explain whether emergency work is available before a customer starts an enquiry. Include verified licensing information only where relevant and supplied.

04

How to communicate your service area

Describe the suburbs or towns you really cover and any travel limits. Use one helpful service-area overview and distinct location content where it adds practical value; avoid dozens of nearly identical suburb pages.

THE WORK THAT FITS

Choose marketing around your priorities.

Start with profile accuracy and the website enquiry path. Map core plumbing services to useful pages, improve internal links and request genuine reviews fairly. Paid search can be considered when capacity, budget and conversion tracking are ready.

Define progress before measuring it.

Review service-specific visibility and successful contact requests where tracking is available. Separate emergency and planned enquiries if the business records them. Confirm jobs through client or CRM data, not call-button clicks.

LOCAL MARKETING FOR ELECTRICIANS

Help local customers find the right electrician.

Make your electrical services, coverage and next steps clear before a homeowner picks up the phone.

Get My Electrical SEO Audit → Explore the priorities ↓

THE CUSTOMER JOURNEY

01 Find a relevant local service

02 Understand the work and coverage

03 Make a confident enquiry

01

How customers search

Customers may search for a specific fault, an installation or a larger planned project. A safety concern needs a direct contact path, while planned installations need clear information about scope and assessment.

02

Which services to prioritise

Prioritise the electrical work your business is qualified and equipped to provide. Lighting, switchboard work or EV charger installation are possible examples—not a default service list. Verify each before creating content or ads.

03

What your website needs to explain

Explain the work offered, appointment process, coverage and contact options. Publish qualifications or licence details only after verification. Do not turn a service page into do-it-yourself instructions for dangerous electrical work.

04

How to communicate your service area

Connect actual coverage to booking capacity. Explain which suburbs or towns you serve without inventing local offices. A service-area business profile must reflect the way your team really operates.

THE WORK THAT FITS

Choose marketing around your priorities.

Align profile categories and services with the website. Build useful pages around confirmed work, make quote forms reliable and establish a neutral review-request process after completed jobs.

Define progress before measuring it.

Track relevant service and location searches, then review successful enquiries if tracking is configured. Tag installation and repair enquiries only with an agreed workflow. Confirmed work comes from business records.

LOCAL MARKETING FOR HEATING AND COOLING BUSINESSES

Get found for the heating and cooling work you do best.

Bring installation, repair and maintenance searches to pages that help customers understand their next step.

Get My HVAC SEO Audit → Explore the priorities ↓

THE CUSTOMER JOURNEY

01 Find a relevant local service

02 Understand the work and coverage

03 Make a confident enquiry

01

How customers search

A system that has stopped working creates a different need from a planned replacement. Seasonal demand can also change what customers look for. Separate repair, installation and maintenance intent instead of sending every search to one general page.

02

Which services to prioritise

Confirm the systems and brands your team supports before writing pages. Air conditioning installation, heating repairs and scheduled servicing are examples to assess against your real scope and region.

03

What your website needs to explain

Explain supported systems, service coverage, booking steps and what information helps assess a request. Avoid invented manufacturer relationships, certifications or energy-savings claims.

04

How to communicate your service area

Show the areas you can serve reliably during both normal and busy periods. Keep hours and availability accurate in your profile and on your site; do not imply immediate service if it depends on scheduling.

THE WORK THAT FITS

Choose marketing around your priorities.

Organise service pages around distinct customer tasks. Review Google Business Profile information, the mobile enquiry path and genuine customer reviews. Consider seasonal Google Ads only with agreed budget and a functioning enquiry destination.

Define progress before measuring it.

Compare visibility and enquiries by service when data permits, and interpret changes against seasonality. Use confirmed sales or installation records to assess booked work rather than equating traffic spikes with revenue.

THE CUSTOMER JOURNEY

01 Find a relevant local service

02 Understand the work and coverage

03 Make a confident enquiry

01

How customers search

A leak, storm damage and a planned replacement prompt different questions. Some visitors need an assessment; others want to understand materials, process and whether the business covers their property.

02

Which services to prioritise

Prioritise the repair, replacement, inspection or maintenance work actually offered. Confirm supported roofing materials and property types before creating detailed pages. Do not claim insurance or specialist capabilities without verification.

03

What your website needs to explain

Explain assessment and quote steps, service coverage and the information a customer can provide safely. Use real project photos only with permission and accurate descriptions of the work completed.

04

How to communicate your service area

Describe the areas your team serves and any project-size or travel constraints. Regional pages should contain useful local information and real work, rather than a city name swapped into the same paragraph.

THE WORK THAT FITS

Choose marketing around your priorities.

Review the profile, core service pages and enquiry form. Structure helpful information around repair versus replacement. Use approved project evidence and genuine reviews to support credibility without inventing results.

Define progress before measuring it.

Review qualified assessment requests, service-specific visibility and the recorded source of enquiries. Longer project decisions mean an enquiry and a signed job may happen at different times; client data is needed to connect them.

LOCAL MARKETING FOR PEST CONTROL BUSINESSES

Help nearby customers find the pest services they need.

Build clear paths from a pest-specific search to accurate service information and a useful enquiry.

Get My Pest Control SEO Audit → Explore the priorities ↓

THE CUSTOMER JOURNEY

01 Find a relevant local service

02 Understand the work and coverage

03 Make a confident enquiry

01

How customers search

Customers often search by the pest they suspect, the property type or an inspection need. They may not know the correct identification, so pages should make assessment and next steps understandable without promising a diagnosis online.

02

Which services to prioritise

Create priorities from the pests, treatments and inspections your team is authorised and equipped to handle. Termite inspections, rodents or general pest services are examples that require verification, not assumed capabilities.

03

What your website needs to explain

Explain how the initial assessment works, coverage and what information is useful for an enquiry. Only publish treatment, safety or preparation guidance approved by qualified staff. Avoid blanket safety or eradication guarantees.

04

How to communicate your service area

Show accurate service coverage and availability. Keep location information consistent across listings and the website, and distinguish the service area from a public office address.

THE WORK THAT FITS

Choose marketing around your priorities.

Align profile services with pest-specific pages where useful. Improve the mobile enquiry path, monitor reviews and use neutral feedback requests. Paid search depends on confirmed services, budget and reliable conversion tracking.

Define progress before measuring it.

Assess relevant pest/service visibility and qualified enquiries where data is available. Confirm inspections, treatments or repeat work through business records. Search clicks alone cannot establish customer outcomes.

LOCAL MARKETING FOR CLEANING BUSINESSES

Get My Cleaning SEO Audit → Explore the priorities ↓

THE CUSTOMER JOURNEY

01 Find a relevant local service

02 Understand the work and coverage

03 Make a confident enquiry

01

How customers search

Recurring home cleaning and a one-off end-of-lease clean have different expectations. Visitors need to understand scope, availability and the details required for an accurate quote.

02

Which services to prioritise

Separate the actual cleaning services and property types your team supports. Regular cleans, deep cleans and move-out work are examples to confirm. Do not imply specialist equipment, certifications or guarantees unless verified.

03

What your website needs to explain

Explain inclusions, exclusions and the quote process in plain language. Ask only for the information needed to respond. Do not advertise a fixed price without a verified amount, currency and scope.

04

How to communicate your service area

Match suburb or town coverage to your scheduling and travel capacity. Explain any coverage limits, and use accurate service-area settings rather than fabricated office locations.

THE WORK THAT FITS

Choose marketing around your priorities.

Build useful service pages, make mobile quote forms easy to complete and keep profile information current. A fair review-request workflow can help show genuine customer feedback without selectively asking only happy customers.

Define progress before measuring it.

Review successful quote requests and, with client data, recurring bookings or one-off jobs. Distinguish enquiry volume from suitable enquiries and confirmed bookings; tracking scope is agreed first.

IN THIS GUIDE

Start with eligibility and ownership
Keep the essentials accurate
Make coverage useful
Use real photos and fair feedback requests
Check the next step
Measure what you can verify

Explore the related service →

Start with eligibility and ownership

Check that the business is eligible for a profile and that the right people control it. Use authorised account access rather than sharing passwords. Verification and reinstatement are decisions made by Google; neither should be promised by a service provider.

Keep the essentials accurate

Review the name, phone, website, hours and actual offered services against the business's current operations. Choose relevant categories without adding unrelated work. If customers are not served at a public location, follow Google's service-area and address rules rather than creating a fictional office.

Make coverage useful

Describe the areas the team can actually serve. A wide service area does not guarantee visibility in every town. The website should explain coverage clearly and support it with useful service information, not a collection of nearly identical location pages.

Use real photos and fair feedback requests

Add current, permission-based photos that help customers understand the business. Request feedback neutrally from customers, with no incentives or selective filtering of unhappy customers. Agree who reviews and responds to feedback.

Check the next step

Open the website link on mobile and test the contact route with permission. A correct profile is only part of the journey: the website needs to explain the services, coverage and a reliable way to enquire. Record what was checked and when.

Measure what you can verify

Review the data available in the profile and any agreed website integrations. A click is not a confirmed enquiry or job. Record changes so you can assess progress without attributing every fluctuation to the latest edit.

Apply this to your business.

A focused review can help identify which of these checks matters first.

When does your business need a service-area page?

IN THIS GUIDE

Begin with actual coverage
Choose an overview before a page count
Look for distinct value
Avoid a template-only rollout
Connect pages to the enquiry journey
Review demand and useful outcomes

Explore the related service →

Begin with actual coverage

Write down where the team works, any travel limits and the services available in each area. A service-area page should make these arrangements easier to understand. It should not imply an office, staff location or availability that the business does not have.

Choose an overview before a page count

A clear coverage overview is often the right starting point. Explain the main towns or suburbs, how a customer can confirm coverage and what to do if their location is not listed. Link this information to the actual services.

Look for distinct value

A separate location page is useful when there is substantial information specific to that area: verified local projects, relevant service constraints, distinct service availability or practical customer questions. Obtain permission for project evidence and describe it accurately.

Avoid a template-only rollout

Dozens of pages with the same text and a different place name do little to help a customer. Prioritise a small set of useful pages and maintain them. Do not invent a local address, testimonial or project to make a page appear more relevant.

Connect pages to the enquiry journey

Help a visitor move between a service, its coverage and a contact option. Keep the pages easy to use on mobile and preserve useful existing URLs. If a URL must change, map it to the most relevant new destination with a permanent redirect.

Review demand and useful outcomes

Use available search and enquiry data to identify whether the content helps the right people. Different locations have different demand and competition. No page structure guarantees rankings, leads or booked jobs.

Apply this to your business.

A focused review can help identify which of these checks matters first.

Visibility tells you about discovery

A ranking check can describe how a result appeared for a query, location, device and time. It is a snapshot, not a universal position for every searcher. Record the context and use a consistent method when comparing checks.

A website interaction is not always an enquiry

A call-button click may not become a call. A form-button click may fail validation or submission. Define a successful form event only after the server confirms the agreed submission outcome; handle failed requests without reporting a conversion.

Agree what counts as a useful enquiry

Spam, out-of-area requests and work the business does not offer can inflate totals. Where the workflow supports it, classify enquiries using agreed business rules. Avoid sending names, emails, phone numbers or free-text form answers to analytics.

Booked jobs need business data

A job is confirmed through a booking system, CRM or the client's own records. Connect it to an enquiry only when the data permits. If this integration does not exist, report the available enquiry measures and state the limitation instead of estimating bookings.

Keep a simple reporting rhythm

Record the work completed, measures available, data limitations and the next priorities. Separate visibility changes from enquiries and confirmed jobs. A report should help decide the next useful action, not bury the owner in unexplained charts.

Check tracking after changes

Forms, consent settings, booking tools and page updates can affect measurement. Re-test the relevant workflow after a change. Use synthetic data for tests, identify it clearly and exclude it from real performance claims.

Apply this to your business.

A focused review can help identify which of these checks matters first.

A CLEAR SCOPE

Know what the work includes.

Useful deliverables, with priorities that reflect your business.

01

Local search audit and keyword-to-page mapping

Connect actual services and locations to relevant search intent and existing pages.

02

Service-area content and useful internal links

Explain real coverage, prioritise useful content and help visitors move between related services.

03

Business listing consistency and relevant local authority work

Review important listings for consistency and assess relevant local opportunities without promising links or rankings.

04

Location-specific tracking where agreed

Agree queries, locations, data access and reporting before interpreting changes.

What depends on your scope

The number of services, locations, content pages and tracking integrations is agreed before work starts. Rankings, enquiries and booked jobs are different outcomes; none is guaranteed.

HOW IT WORKS

From first review to the next useful improvement.

01 Map the opportunity
Review your local presence and relevant competitors.

02 Improve the right pages
Map services and areas to useful pages, then agree priorities.

03 Review the evidence
Implement improvements and review the available evidence.

SEE THE THINKING

Recommendations should have a reason.

Our sample audit explains the checks behind a useful recommendation. It is clearly labelled sample work, with no invented client results.

THE CUSTOMER JOURNEY

01 Find a relevant local service

02 Understand the work and coverage

03 Make a confident enquiry

01

How customers search

A burst pipe and a planned bathroom upgrade are different searches. Urgent visitors need a clear phone number. Planned customers compare. Local work needs enough detail to understand the process and request an estimate.

02

Which services to prioritise

Build priorities around the plumbing work you actually offer: for example, leak repairs, drain cleaning or hot water systems in Australia. UPS pages may use water heaters. These are examples to verify with your team, not a claim that every plumber offers them.

03

What your website needs to explain

Show service coverage, actual hours and a clear call or quote option. Explain whether emergency work is available before a customer starts an enquiry. Include verified licensing information only where relevant and supplied.

04

How to communicate your service area

Describe the suburbs or towns you really cover and any travel limits. Use one helpful service-area overview and distinct location content where it adds practical value; avoid dozens of nearly identical suburb pages.

THE WORK THAT FITS

Choose marketing around your priorities.

Start with profile accuracy and the website enquiry path. Map core plumbing services to useful pages, improve internal links and request genuine reviews fairly. Paid search can be considered when capacity, budget and conversion tracking are ready.

Define progress before measuring it.

Review service-specific visibility and successful contact requests where tracking is available. Separate emergency and planned enquiries if the business records them. Confirm jobs through client or CRM data, not call-button clicks.
